Lesson Plan: Water cycles and ziploc bags

Lesson Activities: 3rd-5th grades

Bellringer/lesson Starter: Discuss what students have already learned about a water cycle and make predictions about what they think will happen with this lesson. Then, continue observing the water cycle from day 1.

Activities:

1. Using the permanent marker, draw a couple of clouds and a sun at the top of the bag, as these are parts of a water cycle.
2. Put 1/2 a cup of water in a cup, then add 2 drops of blue food coloring and mix together until it's a solid blue color.
3. Pour the blue water into the ziplock bag and seal shut.
4. Tape the bag to a window with the clear tape near the sun.
5. Wait between 2 hours and 1 day to see droplets of water forming to the sides of the bag.
6. Begin discussions about observations: evaporation, whether the droplets were high in the air next to the clouds, or lower in the bag like rain, and condensation.

Materials: Plastic zip lock-style bag, permanent marker, water, blue food coloring, clear tape

Wrap-up/Exit Slip: Ask "Why did the water stick to the sides of the bag?"

Extensions: After observing the water cycles, see what happens in a bigger ziplock bag or write about their findings.

But we live in changing times, and Whitebread is mindful of a worldwide decline in play, pointing out that over half the people in the world now live in cities. Outdoor play is curtailed by perceptions of risk to do with traffic, as well as parents' increased wish to protect their children from being the victims of crime, and by the emphasis on 'earlier is better' which is leading to greater competition in academic learning and schools. 'Play in all its rich variety is one of the highest achievements of the human species,' says Dr David Whitebread from the Faculty of Education at the University of Cambridge, UK. 'Somewhat the importance of play has been lost in recent decades. 10 The way a child plays may provide information about possible medical problems. And these paragraphs are taken from journals, magazines, and newspapers, and sometimes scholars' books. It's regarded as something trivial, or even as something negative that contrasts with "work". The opportunities for free play, which I experienced almost every day of my childhood, are becoming increasingly scarce,' he says. It's a real challenge.' Dr Jenny Gibson agrees, pointing out that although some of the steps in the puzzle of how and why play is important have been looked at, there is very little data on the impact it has on the child's later life. 'A strong possibility is that play supports the early development of children's self-control,' explains Baker. Later on, when they tire of this and settle down with a board game, she's learning about the need to follow rules and take turns with a partner.
